Martyna Behrendt
Digital Designer

About Me

Digital Designer balancing on the edge of IT and marketing – and feeling surprisingly at home there. My ideas tend to show up uninvited (usually at 3 a.m.), but I've learned to turn them into sharp, useful designs that actually work.

Before I started designing digital stuff,
I spent six years in architecture – so I know a thing or two about creativity, structure, and working with people who speak entirely different languages (looking at you, devs). I'm all about making things that feel human, whether that means intuitive UX or just being the person who brings the good memes to the team chat.

Let's make cool things.

My Approach

I thoroughly enjoy working with grids and looking for mathematical relationships within my designs. Ultimately, despite the chaos that comes with the creative process, I aim to find harmony and focus on the timeless values, just like in architecture—durability, function, and beauty. At the moment, I would describe myself more as a generalist.
